

How To Make Sure You Don't Get Cheated Out of Your Social Security

You May Think That Signing Up for Your Social Security Is No Big Deal

They want you to think that... but the decisions you make right now could decide whether you die with money to spare or penniless

They've been taking your hard earned dollars for Social Security all these years and it seems like it should be really simple to sign up for your monthly benefits. They make it look that way to lull you to sleep, but there are many decisions to make and crucial rules you need to know. Or you could lose literally hundreds of thousands of dollars... all based off a few simple steps you can take to make sure you are not cheated out of the money that is rightfully yours.

Our Newsmax family and friends at The Franklin Prosperity Report have put together all the secrets you need to know in a guide to perhaps the most important financial decisions you will ever make.

The free guide we're offering you today is called Strategies to Maximizing Your Social Security and these are just some of the eye-popping surprises:

- You can lose the benefits you are entitled to if you make this one critical mistake.
- Retirement age is a moving target under Social Security law and baby boomers have special rules.
- You can give up some of your filing rights if you get the timing of signing up for Social Security wrong.
- How Social Security officials can make you think you've made a good, simple decision when you've just cost yourself hundreds of thousands of dollars.
- Ever have very low or zero income years due to business problems, unemployment or disability? These bad years can cost you thousands. (We show how to erase these bad years from your personal Social Security Benefit calculations.)

This Social Security decision is much harder than they want you to know, so we've put together practical tools and tips to get the right decisions for you. Tips like:
